Gurugram-based startup PB Healthcare Services has announced that global investment and transformation company, General Catalyst, was the lead investor in the first tranche of its seed funding round of $218 million. PB Fintech Limited also participated in the round, along with other external investors.

The investment will be used to establish PB Health's initial hospital network in the Delhi NCR region and to accelerate product development and technological innovation.

As part of its broader vision, PB Health is building an end-to-end healthcare platform that seamlessly integrates care and insurance. By operating its own hospitals and leveraging technology, analytics, and a preventive-care approach, the company aims to improve long-term health outcomes, reduce avoidable surgeries, and deliver a more predictable, full-stack patient experience.

Commenting on the development, Yashish Dahiya, Chairman & Group CEO of PB Fintech, said, " Our vision is to create a truly integrated healthcare ecosystem where patients can experience frictionless, high-quality care. Our focus remains on building a tech-first healthcare platform that improves outcomes, enhances trust, and redefines the care journey for millions across India."

Neeraj Arora, Managing Director at General Catalyst said, "We believe India has a unique opportunity to leapfrog legacy models and build a resilient, inclusive health assurance system—one that makes care more proactive, affordable, and accessible. Yashish has already built one of India's largest insurance platforms, and is uniquely positioned to deliver impact at scale for the country's middle class."

PB Health is building a next-generation healthcare platform that delivers seamless, cashless, and patient-centric care through an integrated hospital network. Its vision is to bridge the gap between insurance and healthcare delivery, making high-quality care more accessible and predictable for patients across India.
