OSSO: Next-Gen Orthopaedics, a fast-growing healthcare startup building a network of full-stack centres for the prevention and treatment of musculoskeletal (MSK) problems, including sports injuries, has raised Rs 4 Crore (~$440,000) in seed funding from the Haldiram family office, and leading angel investors Sahil Jindal (DS Jindal Group), Aakashdeep Goyal, Parijat Sharma, and Viraj Patel, along with existing investors.

The capital will be deployed to scale the company's network of centres in Gurugram, introduce revolutionary new technologies in the field of orthopaedics, build ecosystem partnerships, and strengthen its team.

OSSO is addressing a large and growing market of MSK pain, postural issues, orthopaedic degenerative disorders and sports injuries through full-stack centres that bring together top orthopaedic doctors with leading physiotherapists under the same roof, and with a shared conviction of bringing convenience, transparency and accountability of treatments and clinical outcomes.

“Healthcare needs operators who think long-term and build with discipline,” said Kunal Kishore Dhawan, Co-Founder & CEO at OSSO. “We’re excited to partner with the Haldiram family office, who clearly understand retail and building scalable businesses, along with a high-quality group of angels who share our belief in long-term value creation in healthcare.”

Umesh Kumar Agarwal, Managing Director at Haldiram’s added, “We’ve seen the way the founding team at OSSO has scaled their operations over the past one year, achieved high patient retention and clinical outcomes, without compromising on trust and ethics, and we’re excited about backing them as they move forward towards the next phase of their growth.”

Previously, the company had raised a pre-seed round anchored by Blume Ventures Founders’ Fund, along with some leading angel investors, through which they had set up their flagship centre in DLF Phase-4, Gurgaon, and achieved operational profitability.
